

MORE COMPLEX THAN YOU KNOW

“Yes there are many in the Realms of Correction who will not make it to Heaven, and it is by the undeserved Mercy of God that they were given a chance at salvation at all. By the Word, the strict letter of the Word, many of these souls should have been sent directly to Hell. However due to numerous factors, the least of which is not the intercession by the righteous and the saints, these souls gained the Mercy of God and were allowed to go to one of the several Realms of Correction.

The deeper areas of the realms are painful, very painful to the human body and the spirit and the mind—for God is not there; and the circumstances by which the dead arrive at these realms is well known and every infraction of God’s Laws is visible and must be repented and fully expiated before any progress can be made to higher areas of these realms...and the advancements even for the truly and wholly repentant are very slow. There are those who in the times directly after Jesus walked the Earth are just now emerging to the Marginal Heaven, and there are many who simply gave up the fight and gave themselves over to Satan.

These of course did not fully realize the extent of the torment and pain and complete distress of Hell, yet no matter how they beg for a reprieve and another opportunity, they will not get it for the Covenant is absolute in this area of law, and Hell hath no redemption and all who are there hath no redemption as well. If modern day Christians knew how, by even a series of what might be called minor infractions, that their soul can and will end up in a Realm of Correction, their lives would change dramatically, for God’s Word is absolute and non-bending...it was established on principles of good, righteousness, holiness, purity, and obedience, and it cannot and will not change because of the modern notions of what ‘good’ is.

Good is not a malleable principle and it is not ‘relative’ to anything but God. He established good and He inculcated it within the fabric of all the physical and spiritual reality of man, and in man’s disobedience, he has attempted to change the character and definition of good, but humans being the creation and not the Creator, have absolutely no acceptable input on the foundations of good...for God created mankind in a way that good was the governing part of their existence, and to change good would require changing humans themselves into another entity and this God reserves for other cultures elsewhere.

Good will always be static in definition to humans and they have the choice to accept it or reject it, and the perils of rejection are clearly delineated and are to be known and respected. God is Lord and He established His Kingdom—not man—and if man attempts to change the Laws of The King there is punishment...up to the permanent banishment of that human infractor to realms where God is not.

One must realize that God's creation is not just the Earth for man, man is an eternal creature and therefore the domain of man includes all realms of Heaven, Correction, and Hell; and given how the human chooses to live the physical life...so goes the reward or punishment for those free will choices. The life of a human is fluid and it pours over into the other realms and righteous humans can influence activities in other realms—you must believe this, for it is true; and every conscious choice that one makes draws that being to the appropriate eternal realm of existence. It is like a molding process where the being actually molds their eternity. Do you see this?

Your existence is not simple; it is more complex than most all realities ever made by God. The Word says that you are fearfully and wonderfully made and this is not a trite phrase, this is exactly true.

Every second, thought, and choice matters.....make them righteous.”

Do not err: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, Nor the effeminate, nor liars with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor railers, nor extortioners, shall possess the kingdom of God.
